I was worried I applied too late

Really stressful and many unnecessary steps.

Stress, anything to do with applications is just a stressful to-do list because you have to try to get everything done within a certain timeframe. It would be nice if the website had a checkmark to-do list for everything you've already submitted, and you can see what else you need to submit and do.

excitement

13) What was unexpected for you during the filling an application for school?

4 responses

I don't think it asked what I wanted in a masters program

How tedious it was.

I hoped that it was easier to locate and find the information I needed, but everything was hidden within each other, with the "wrong" words, so it was difficult to find what I really needed to know. I ended up having to bookmark every little thing so that I can come back to that exact spot without having to go through all those points in the page to find what I needed. Everything should be on one page, not all throughout the website, in my opinion. If you want people to apply, then you should make the process as easy and clear (especially this one) as possible.

My major had limited seats and I had to go through a competition foundation year to get the major I wanted.

14) Please share one thought on how could this process be improved to help prospect students.

4 responses

I recommend a interview of some sort- it can help the student match with what program the student wants